A Long History of Working Together

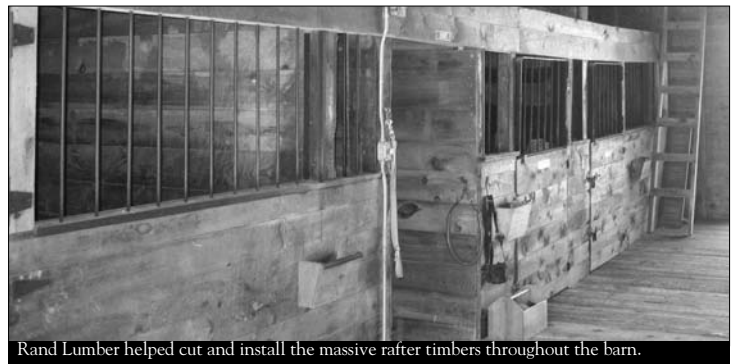

In 1989 the DeMarco family purchased a 242-year-old home on Washington Road in Rye and immediately got to work on the future of Cobbler Hill Farm. "It was run down to the ground," recalls Sam DeMarco, "and we've rebuilt every single inch of this place with the help of Rand Lumber."

From the custom fitting of timbers to hemlock flooring for the horse stalls, Rand Lumber has provided the majority of materials that have gone into Cobbler Hill Farm.

Plus, Cobbler Hill is a 100% recycled farm: Every piece of wood is either used or re-used. Bark that Rand strips off logs in the lumber yard is used for Cobbler Hill's lunging ring. Leftover sawdust shavings provide warm insulation in the horse stalls. Even scrap lumber is turned into fencing and jumps.

Sam notes that the crew at Rand Lumber "always knows what we need. We'll go out back to the lumber yard on the coldest and most blustery New England day, and everyone will wave hello and let you know you're a valuable customer."

Looking around the active farm on a recent Saturday morning, he adds, "Rand Lumber is a big part of our farm – and they will be for a long time coming."

Rand Lumber helped cut and install the massive rafter timbers throughout the barn.

Cobbler Hill Farm was named 2005 NH Farm of Distinction Award by the NH Department of Agriculture.
