Customer Service Sets Rand Lumber Apart

Seacoast area building contractors have several lumber sources they can turn to, no matter what size the project. But according to Rye contractor Joe Tucker, only one company offers an exceptional level of customer service, and that's Rand Lumber.

We recently provided Joe with specialty band-sawn sheathing for a combination barn and workshop that he's building behind his home on Washington Road in Rye. The 36-foot by 48-foot two-story modified post-and-beam structure features a full basement for storing materials and equipment needed for projects, and eight fully-enclosed stalls—future home to the wide variety of animals and wildlife that Joe and his wife Julie care for on a daily basis.

Each 12-foot by 12-foot stall is walled with band-sawn pine provided by Rand Lumber. Rather than showing the usual arced pattern of a circular saw cut, Joe asked us to provide rough-hewn pine cut with a band saw. The result is a board that features the same warmth and character as traditional rough-hewn pine, but with a more aesthetic finish.

With the design provided by York, Maine Architect Scott Ferentino, Joe Tucker is building his combination barn and workshop to be as maintenance-free as possible.

While Joe says he is very happy with the quality of our lumber, he points to our commitment to customer service as the real difference between Rand Lumber and other suppliers. He recalls, "What really impressed me is that Jim Rand called me once to confirm the order and how much material I needed, and a week later he called again to ask if I was happy with the quality of the product, if the sizing was right, and that the order was what I expected.

"Most lumber yards won't call and ask how the product worked out. Maybe it's a carryover from years ago when you always had that personal relationship, but since the Rand family grew up in the business, I think it's ingrained in them. Product quality can be the same between lumber yards, but it's the service that separates the companies apart."

Rand supplied the the rough-hewn pine used in the stalls, custom cut with a band saw.

A greenhouse will be built off the side of the barn. A radiant heating system is built into the concrete slab.

Joe has more than first-hand experience with Rand Lumber. A native of Rye, his first job out of high school was at Rand Lumber. "As soon as I turned 18 and was old enough to get my commercial driver's license, I began working in the yard gathering lumber and delivering lumber to Rand customers," he says.

From the first custom-built saltbox he built in 1976, to the high-end, architecturally detailed homes he is known for today, Joe has built a successful business with his appreciation for quality materials and workmanship. We are proud to continue to help Joe provide high quality custom homes using products and materials from Rand Lumber.
