Quality Lumber Builds on Camp Bauercrest Tradition

High on a hill above an unassuming residential neighborhood in Amesbury, Mass., sits Camp Bauercrest, a 77-year-old overnight camp for Jewish boys that evokes traditional summer-camp images.

Keeping the 21 bunkhouses and 15 other buildings that surround the hills, tennis courts and playing fields of the camp's 10.5 lakefront acres in good working order is Property Manager Leon MacCorkle. From solid pine trim to novelty siding, pickwick to VJoint, and more, Leon depends on Rand Lumber to help him maintain the historical as well as structural integrity of the camp's facilities.

"We get materials from Rand that we can't get anywhere else," says Leon. "For example, I prefer to use Rand's solid, milled pine for exterior trim and doors because I know it will last."

Our novelty siding, planed on four sides with tongue and groove edges and a scallop on one side, provides Leon with a traditional alternative to clapboards. "It was used when the bunkhouses were first built 70 years ago," he notes, "and it matches up perfectly so we can keep that same look."

For the camp's numerous locker, cabinet door, and wainscoting needs, Leon specifies edge & center bead – another traditional favorite. "I get all of these materials pre-primed, and that's tough to find; with so many buildings to keep in good repair, this extra step saves our crew a lot of time."

It's important to us at Rand that we provide only high quality materials that can stand up to the more than 200 boys who spend all or parts of their summers at Camp Bauercrest.

Since a fire devastated the arts and crafts building, gymnasium, and three of the bunkhouses in 1996, Leon and his staff of three have been tackling a renovation project each year—while also keeping up with ongoing repair work—all with materials from Rand Lumber.

Our pickwick lines the walls of the massive dining room, and our VJoint and hemlock flooring are showcased on the ceilings and floors of the computer lab and bunkhouses. Comments Leon, continued...

The ceiling of the camp's new computer lab shows off our VMatch pine.

"The camp is very sports oriented, and the kids tend to come in here with their cleats still on. These floors take a beating but the hemlock holds up great."

Previously a Rye-based carpenter, Leon has been a long-time customer of Rand Lumber. Now, he says he continues to use us for reasons beyond the quality of our lumber. "For example, lumber can be milled to my specifications when needed; I've even felled some trees and had them sent to Rand so they could be cut for lumber and used at the camp," he says.

"Also, Rand is the only supplier that can match the original pickwick used throughout the camp; this was especially important in the dining hall, which has a very strong sense of tradition."

We look forward to continuing to contribute to the strong legacy of Camp Bauercrest with our quality lumber and materials for years to come.
