A Cottage is Transformed into a Comfortable Oceanview Home

Desiring more space, but loving their Rye location, Joe and Lisa Adamaitis decided late last Summer to renovate their Highland Park Avenue home. Beginning as a remodeling project, the Adamaitis family designed their dream home themselves, then had the plans perfected by friend Lee Belanger, a NH architect.

The construction team of Joel Hebert and John Peyser were hired for the project and work began in October of 2002. Joel and John were up for the task, drawing on many collective years of experience in both new construction and remodeling projects, all based on classic New England home designs. In just over five months, the new building is nearing completion.

Rand Lumber has enjoyed being a part of this changing project. Joe and Lisa came to Jim Rand at the onset of the project for a quote on all the materials needed. They even toured Jim's home to and built a trusting work relationship. While the builders and homeowners alike valued the long-term relationship with Rand, and enjoyed Rand's close proximity to the project's location; the price had to be competitive as well.

Joe and Lisa took advantage of Rand's whole-house pricing — very competitive pricing on large projects needing a variety of building materials.

Some of the many materials purchased from Rand for this project include: siding, Cambara decking, framing, exterior trim, and roofing materials.

Joe and Lisa are now working inside their new home, painting the new rooms and finishing other decorating details. Lisa, a graphic designer by trade, has chosen a vibrant collection of complimentary colors to enhance the comfortable, spacious living areas of the new home. They will be ready to move from their rental unit down the street back home by the end of April, just in time for summer.
