Remodeling enlarges living space for a young family

Jeff Ireland's craftsmanship keeps the home's charm while adding needed space

Jeff Ireland and his crew have been hard at work on the Craig family home on Washington Road in Rye since July of this year. From the road, the home retains a similar style as before the work began, and blends nicely with the surrounding neighborhood of capes and colonials.

Walking inside, the home has changed dramatically from its older image. The change is so vast, the Craig family actually chose to move out while work was completed. The previously small cape has been expanded to house the family of four, including two active little girls who now have their own bedrooms in the added second floor space.

Downstairs, the old floors are being refinished, a custom mantle built, custom doors created to match existing doors, and new custom cabinets and countertop installed. A new addition opens up space for a large, open kitchen and dining area that look out on a new deck.

Previously a one-story dwelling, Jeff added the two new bedrooms upstairs.

The home also evolved from having one bathroom to three.

When selecting materials for this project, Jeff frequently came to Rand. All framing for the home and all materials for the new deck were purchased at Rand. Convenience, quality and price were major considerations in deciding where to purchase materials.

As general contractor for the project, Jeff hired electricians, plumbers and other tradesmen. His company completed all framing and woodworking.

The moving truck arrived back on Monday the 25th of November. After just five months of transformation, the project will be wrapping up just in time for the Craig family to enjoy the holidays in their new, enlarged space.
